Mystery at the Museum
News flash! A clever criminal broke into the museum last night and stole a valuable sculpture. The beautiful statue once stood in front of a palace in the country of France. The police detective does not know how the thief was able to get away with his crime, as all of the customary security measures were in place. The guards reported no unusual activity during the night. The only clue is a large thumbprint on the glass case that held the statue. The police chief says that he will go to the ends of the universe to find the fugitive.

Edit for Spelling

Circle the 12 misspelled words in this paragraph. Write them correctly on the lines below.

My Uncle Hank

Last summer, my parents sent me off for a two-week visit with Uncle Hank. Uncle Hank is my favorite uncle. He runs an earthworm farm. Hank has had a lot of birthdays and has plenty of wrinkles, but if you call him old, he’ll call you a truant and laugh. He is still full of life and energy. His grammar isn’t perfect, but he knows lots of humorous stories and tall tales. He will look you in the eye and tell you very earnestly about the time he wrestled a 12-foot-long alligator, fought off a whole family of grizzly bears, or a semilunar, hair-raising adventure! There is no lack of fun around Uncle Hank! Before he retired, Uncle Hank was a circuit judge. My dad says he is a worthy man and a courteous gentleman. I wish everyone could have an Uncle Hank!

The ship’s captain tried desperately to keep his boat afloat among the towering waves. He was nearing the point of utter exaustion. He side heavily and said to himself, “Without a dout, this is the worst storm I have ever seen.” He watched his narled hands resting with the wheel, trying with all his might to avoid a shipreck. He did not want to condemn his sailors or his ship to such a terrible fate.

He struggled on through the night. In the morning, the winds ceased. The sun peeked out from behind the clouds. The air was fresh and sweetly sented. The captain could finally rest. He ate a holesome breakfast and then went right to bed. He was afraid he might have caught newmonia after being out in the moist, cold air all night.

When the ship returned safely to port, the king invited the captain to his cassle. He wanted to aknowledge the heroic efforts of the honerable old captain.

Dear Diary,

Our principle, Mr. Duncan, announced some exciting news yesterday! The senior class is going on a trip threw Italy. We have to do a lot of things to get ready. First, we have to write letters on school stationary explaining to our parents what a positive affect this trip will have on our educations. We must persuade them that we should ceize this important opportunity. Next, we have to obtain reservations at a youth hostile in Florence. Finely, we have to undergo a through physical examination to make sure we are healthy.

Our conversations about the trip never seem to sease. It is all we can think about! Mr. Duncan advises us to have patients, but we are all counting the days until our departure date.

When our tickets arrive next month, Mr. Duncan will keep them in the school safe so that we do not loose them. I think he believes that our excitement will effect our ability to be responsible. It is a little bit annoying, but we are too happy to be hostel toward him.

I think this is the most exciting thing that has ever happened to me!

Ciao,
Madeline

“Have you ever had a terrible baby-sitting experience?” Carol inquired.

“Oh, yes,” I replied. “Last week, I took care of two children who wined and screamed all day long. Their mother had menshuned that they were not feeling well, but I insissted that I could handle the job. What a mistake!”

“How awful,” exclaimed Carol. “What did you do?”

“Well, first I explaned that they would feel better if they would calm down,” I remarcked. “Then, I demandded that they both take naps.”

“I’ve observd your child-care skills,” comented Carol. “I’m sure you were able to comfort the children.”

“Yes,” I admited. “I wispered stories to them until they fell asleep. When they woke up, they were much happier.”

“Well,” Carol conclooded, “I don’t think baby-sitting is the job for me!”

The Birthday Present

For my birthday, my parents gave me the most stoopendous present ever! It is the cutest miniture poodle puppy you have ever seen. I named her Poppy. She is inkwisitive and playful and lots of fun.

Our ancsient cat, Oscar, thinks Poppy is rediculous. It is obvious that Poppy’s antics are obnoxshus to him. Poppy tries to be congeenial, but Oscar just puts his nose in the air and walks away. I am optimistic that in time the two of them will become ginuine friends. In the meantime, it is pethetic to see Oscar looking so unhappy. He probably feels that he is obsalete, now that we have a new pet.

The Rupture

Nurse Callaway put on her uniform and rode her bicycle to her job at the school. When she arrived in the office, Rudy was already there, holding his side and groaning. Nurse Callaway adjusted her spectacles and placed her stethoscope around her neck, and then called Rudy into the examining room.

Rudy was one of Nurse Callaway’s favorite students. He had managed to transform his behavior over the past few months. Instead of being sullen and angry, Rudy was now full of fun. He liked to play friendly jokes on everyone and could be counted on to interrupt a dull class with an amusing comment. Rudy had won the respect of the staff for his hard work and cheerful nature.

All the same, Nurse Callaway suspected that Rudy was not really ill. She thought he was pretending to be sick so that he could have a chance to look through her microscope. After a short examination, she quickly changed her mind.

“Oh, Rudy,” she exclaimed. “I believe you are suffering from a ruptured appendix!”
